

The eight panels every channel page needs, and the order viewers read them

A channel page is read from the top of the panels down, once, by someone who arrived during an ad break. Eight panels, each one title and one to three lines, in the order the questions come in. Tick each as you upload it.

- ☐ 1. About.
Who you are and what the stream is, in three lines a stranger can read in the time it takes to decide. Line one: what you play or make. Line two: when (the days, the hour, the time zone). Line three: what the chat is like. Nothing else; the rest of the page carries the rest.
- ☐ 2. Schedule.
The days and the start time, in one time zone with the zone named, and the one line that matters more than the times: what happens when you miss a night (a post, a Discord ping, nothing). Three nights a week written as three words reads better than a seven-day grid with four blanks.
- ☐ 3. Rules.
Five lines at most, the first one positive. Be kind; no spoilers past the hedge; no backseating unless asked; English in chat; the mods' word is final. A wall of twelve rules reads as a channel that has had trouble; five read as a channel that has thought about it.
- ☐ 4. Socials.
One line per place you actually post, with the handle written out, newest first. A dead account listed here sends people to a page from 2023; list only what you updated this month.
- ☐ 5. Tip jar.
Where tips go and what they do, in two lines: the link, and the one honest sentence ("never expected, always read out"; "pays for the games on the vote"). No goal bar on the panel; goals live in the stream overlay, where they can move.
- ☐ 6. Setup.
The chair, the mic, the camera, the capture box, the PC parts, one line each, because "what mic is that" is asked every night and the panel answers it while you play. Model names, not brands alone.
- ☐ 7. Commands.
The six chat commands people use, with what each does: !schedule, !socials, !setup, !lurk, !discord, !vote. Every command on the bot is a list nobody reads; six is a panel.
- ☐ 8. FAQ.
The three questions you answer every stream that are not the setup. Can I play with you; why is the stream delayed; do you have a Discord. Three lines, three answers, and the chat asks them a little less.

Title on the image; the lines in the description box under it (editable, tappable, readable on a phone). Two colours, used the same way on all eight: one background behind the title, one accent for the single shape. 320 × 100 at 2× (640 × 200), PNG. Upload top to bottom in this order; set each panel's link to the thing its title promises.

Stream Panel Pack builds the six to eight panels in your two colours, from our own templates and fonts (text and flat shapes only; no platform logo, no game art), plus the About text and the upload order, by the next day: streampanelpack.pages.dev ($29 / £24 incl. VAT / A$45 / C$39). This list with what goes on each line: streampanelpack.pages.dev/order/ · The invented Mossline sample set: streampanelpack.pages.dev/sample/ · Not affiliated with Twitch, Kick or YouTube.